I had cataract surgery, and my vision was good; but now, it's getting worse. I think my cataract grew back — now what?

Cataracts do not regrow. Some people do develop haziness after surgery which can be corrected. This can be easily rectified with a minor laser procedure. Please call for a follow-up appointment with your doctor to confirm a diagnosis.

Why do my eyes tear so much?

As we age, our eyes start producing fewer tears. In response to this, our eyes then spontaneously tear to lubricate the surface; however, our tears are not only made up of water. They also are comprised of mucus and oil, which gets washed away by excessive tearing. This, then becomes a cycle of dry eye. Patients find this hard to understand because their eyes always seem so wet. We typically suggest using artificial tears for this complaint; however, there are some other medical eye conditions that can cause tearing. We would be happy to schedule you for an evaluation.
